WORDS FROM THE WIGGINS

Jim and Barbara Wiggins, Chapter Directors

This is the second month in a row that I've written this article while waiting for thunderstorms to clear. Though the rain is usually welcome, I'm tiring of it lately but I'm sure I'll be hoping for more by mid-August.

Seven people were able to attend the gathering at the Buffet Palace last month. In addition to George, and I, Dan and Donna and Dale and Kathy were there. Ten were able to make it to Napoli's. George, Barbara, and I were joined by Rich and Vickie, QP, Leo and Margaret and Jimmy and Pat.

We have not been able to have an Ice Cream Social for a while but we are having one on Tuesday June 8th at 7PM at Braum's Ice Cream and Burger Restaurant in Greenville. The chapter normally pays for ice cream for anyone with a birthday in the past quarter but since we haven't had one in a while, the chapter will buy your choice of ice cream concoction for all of our members.

We plan to meet in Greenville at the Buffet Palace June 1st (the first Tuesday of the month) at 6PM and at Napoli's in Wylie June 15th at 6PM. Drop by for some good food and conversation.

Barbara and I logged into Chapter R's meeting on Thursday evening since routes to Wing Ding were to be discussed. Don Walker (CD of Chapter R) announced that he had three known routes from North Texas to Springfield. Two were two-day routes and one for a single day. Give me a call if you're going to Wing Ding and want to try to ride with someone.

“The Lone Star Rider” (Rex

Covington) was a guest speaker at the chapter meeting. He is a full-time rider raising money for the American Diabetes Association. See his website at Lone Star Rider for more information.

The Missouri District Rally, —Wingin the Ozarks is June 3rd-5th in Branson Missouri.

Wing Ding 42 is June 29 – July 3, 2021 at the Springfield Expo Center in Springfield, Missouri. You can register for the event packages and for notifications when updates occur at the following site <http://42.wing-ding.org/>. George has investigated hotels in the area. Contact George for more info on hotels.

The Texas District Rally will be at the YO Ranch in Kerrville on the same dates (April 29th-May 1st) but is planned to be a complete rally instead of a Ride-in.

GWRR is still offering a Free four-month trial membership. The application form is enclosed with this newsletter. Please let any prospective members know of this offer.

Risk Management: An Essential but Little Recognized Riding Skill

Risk Management is an essential riding skill that many riders implement subconsciously and may never consciously think about. However, like many mental riding skills, it has the most potential if the rider puts conscious thought into its implementation and can thus apply it to a wide range of riding situations. In its widest meaning, Risk Management is an understanding of the risks involved in a specific activity and the taking of appropriate steps to reduce the risks involved in that activity, while still getting the maximum enjoyment from it. When buying machinery that may place the workforce at risk, a manufacturer who practices risk management will purchase all the appropriate safety equipment and training required to ensure the safe operation of that machinery. Thus reducing the risk of an accident involving that machine.

Equally, a motorcyclist buying a new or replacement motorcycle always keeps enough money aside to buy the appropriate riding gear and training to help him or her survive and enjoy the new motorcycle. Risk management is an essential part of safe motorcycle riding. The riders who admit that there is a risk to riding and who take the appropriate steps to reduce that risk to the level they are willing to accept while riding are generally the one who crash less and enjoy riding the most.

Accepting the Existence of A Risk

Admitting there is a risk in riding a motorcycle is the first step in implementing Risk Management techniques. Risk management involves a very personal evaluation of the extent of risk the rider is prepared to accept. The amount of risk is basically up to the rider to decide just what level of risk they are willing to accept then ride accordingly. The rider's decision about what is an acceptable level of risk must be made about all aspects of riding and can vary widely from rider to rider. For example, a risk management decision about in what weather conditions to ride will see some riders refusing to ride in rain, others refusing to ride in frost, yet others refusing to ride in snow, while some riders will ride in almost any one of the adverse conditions. One of the most obvious risk management decisions involves what speed to maintain at a particular time. This is a classic illustration of the complexity of risk management decisions as it involves many factors including:

- The rider's health.
- The rider's level of skill.
- The type of tires on the motorcycle.
- The condition of the motorcycle.
- The type of motorcycle, i.e. cruiser or sport bike, for example.
- The environment.
- The skill and preferences of other riders in the group (since your risk management decisions also involve the safety of people around you).

We may think a rider is a wimp because of their refusal to take risks, or is a nut because of the risks they are willing to accept, but the theory of risk management says that, given the previous exceptions, the choice of risk level must rest with the rider.

However, there is one pre-condition - the rider must be skilled and educated enough to be able to make an informed decision on the subject. But, then again, gaining skills and education on the correct operation of a motorcycle is all part of Risk Management.

Risk Assessment

An essential part of Risk Management is Risk Assessment. Risk Assessment, like all motorcycle riding skills, is largely a learnt skill. Most people new to motorcycles and with no training have poor risk assessment skills. Risk Assessment starts right from when you decide to ride a motorcycle. You have thus made the decision that your assessment of the risks involved in riding a motorcycle is such that you consider that they are acceptable to you. One could say that those who have an accident and then give up riding are signaling that their original assessment of the risks and their present perception of the risks are at odds, and the risks are no longer acceptable. Having decided to ride, the next risk assessment is in what to wear. The use or lack of protective clothing by a rider is a good indication of the quality or otherwise of that rider's risk assessment abilities. The rider with poor risk assessment skills will either use too little protective clothing or may use inappropriately excessive protective clothing.

Risk Reaction

A part of Risk Assessment is Risk Reaction - the level at which the rider adopts a Defensive Posture or, in other words, the weighting the rider places upon reacting to a potential hazard on the road. This usually depends either upon what training a rider received when first getting into motorcycling or on the painful experience he/she has had while motorcycling. A simple example of Risk Reaction is the rider's reaction at an intersection. Those riders who are not strong on Risk Reaction (usually the inexperienced ones) will accelerate hard up to a loaded intersection or through a green light. Riders with medium strength Risk Reaction will not change pace through a loaded intersection or green lights. Riders with very strong Risk Reaction skills will adopt a strongly defensive posture at a loaded intersection or lights, slowing and moving laterally in the lane to create more space cushioning at both intersection and green lights. Riders with over-developed Risk Reaction skills will tend to brake and slow down markedly for every intersection or green light.

Risk Recognition

Another part of Risk Management is Risk Recognition. It's obvious that if one cannot recognize the risks, one cannot manage these risks. For the rider, risk comes in two forms - subjective risk and objective risk. Subjective risk is the risk that is inherent in a rider's attitude. Objective risk is the risk created by external factors such as other motorists and environment and road conditions. Thus, the first thing a proficient rider must do is examine his attitudes and philosophies to riding and decide whether these place the rider at risk and whether these risks are acceptable or necessary. If the decision is made that these risks are unnecessary, the rider must then work on those attitudes and philosophies to change them. This mental analysis of one's mental approach to riding is probably the most difficult task in risk management. The process of recognizing and managing external risk is simply but clearly illustrated in a rider's action on a rainy day. The external risk here is wet weather with the resultant riding discomfort and wet roads etc. Experienced riders will thus recognize wet weather as something that increases risk while riding. Having recognized the risk, the rider then makes his personal risk management decision. Some will accept the risks and ride to work as normal. Others will accept the risk to a slightly lesser extent by being very careful on the way to work, while a few will decide the risk level is beyond what they wish to accept and will take the car to work. Every rider is entitled to decide what level of risk he or she is prepared to take and the experienced rider will accept that person's decision. If that other rider's low acceptance of risk makes riding with him or her an aggravation, the experienced rider will simply avoid riding with that rider rather than try to force an alteration of the riders level of risk acceptance. None of us have the right to force a rider to put themselves at a level of risk that is not acceptable to them. Risk Management plays its part in many motorcycling decisions, just some of which are what, where, when, and how you ride; who you ride with; insurance, maintenance, protective clothing; and, of course, training. Ultimately, Risk Management is probably one of the most important riding skills. With good Risk Management skills, a rider will enjoy the ride more and be a safer rider.

Have a good and safe ride.

Until next month, ☺

Scott
